

Sint Eustatius - April 27- May 4, 2019

The waters around St. Eustatius are some of the most pristine in the Caribbean and even throughout the world. Diving here is diverse with several unique habitats including walls, historical wrecks, patch reefs, macro dive sites, lava flows, boulder slides, and rock outcroppings. Because mass tourism has yet to arrive to Statia, the advantages are two-fold. First, the reefs have not suffered due to overexposure to human guests. Second, you are likely to have every dive site to yourself.

Reefs and walls give habitat to many creatures. And the lava flows and outcroppings make for interesting underwater panoramas. You won't be bored for choice in St. Eustatius.

Divers can expect warm tropical weather year round with waters that range from 79-82°F (26-28°C) and variable visibility depending on the site. While it can rain at any point throughout the year, dry season generally lasts from January to June. July to December brings greater risk of rain and hurricanes. However, you are sure to love diving at any time in the remote paradise known as St. Eustatius.
