

Key Largo

December 4-8, 2021

The third largest barrier reef in the world is found off the Atlantic coast of the Florida Keys and that makes for world-class diving all along the 100-mile stretch that runs between Key Largo to the north and the southernmost tip in Key West.

The many reefs of Key Largo are as varied as the people that live on the island. Each one seems to have a unique personality and offer its own hidden treasures (sometimes literally). Tropical fish are in abundance as many of these reefs have been marine sanctuaries for over twenty years.

When it comes to varieties of fish, Key Largo is a fish nerd's dream with over 15 different species of parrotfish alone. Snapper, spadefish, porcupine, and a variety of colorful tropical fishes, plus nurse, reef, and the occasional hammerhead sharks, rays, and plenty of sea turtles call the reefs home. Look for little critters too! Flamingo tongue and nudibranchs can be found on sea fans, and eel gardens often sprout in the sandy patches!
