

Socorro – The Nautilus Undersea

February 7-15, 2021

The Revillagigedo archipelago, of which Socorro Island is one, possesses an absolutely unique ecosystem with many endemic plant and animal species.

That is why the Archipelago is often called Mexico's Galapagos. Indeed, it is as remote, as diverse, as pristine, and, well, even less inhabited than Ecuador's pearl. And for divers, this is the place to go for unforgettable manta diving, which is as unique as the Archipelago itself. This is the only place on Earth where you will — guaranteed — dive and interact with giant mantas.

Shark sighting is also very good at Socorro Island with common sightings of silky, Galapagos, hammerhead, whitetip and silvertip sharks. Whale sharks are usually spotted in the first half of the season and then it's the whale season when a population of 1,200 humpbacks moves into the island's waters.
